An author is an individual who has made significant intellectual contributions to a publication by meeting all these three conditions:

1. made a significant contribution to the conception and design, or acquisition of data, or analysis and interpretation of data
2. participated in drafting the article or revising it critically for important intellectual content
3. approved the final version of the manuscript

The order of authorship should correspond with the degree of contribution of each author in a descending order. It should be decided prior to the write up of the manuscript by all the authors. At this point it should also be decided what contributions to the manuscript each author is going to work on.

The first author writes the first draft of the manuscript, incorporating the contributions made by the co-authors, the revisions made to the drafts by the co-authors, and after all the co-authors have reviewed and accepted the final draft, then submit it for publication. Usually the first author is also the corresponding author.

The other authors have the obligation to critically review the manuscript for important intellectual content and make appropriate significant contributions. Co-authors can also write specific sections of the manuscript.

Honorary authorships (gift authorship and guest authorship) are not permitted, neither is ghost authorship (failing to credit individuals who have made substantial contributions to the research and writing of the manuscript).

The resident of the admitting team directly involved in the care of a pediatric patient, if so interested in writing a case report will have the opportunity to do so, and should communicate such desire to the attendings and residents involved in the care of the patient, and to the Scholarly Activity Committee. At that point, it should be determined who are going to be authors, their roles and expected contributions. The designated first author will have a 3 month period to write a first draft, if this is not done, then another co-author could become the first author and write the first draft after conversations among the authors.

The authors should follow the author guidelines of the journal that they intend to submit the case report. (Please note that several journals have restriction in the number of authors allowed for case reports)
