CUMC has three wireless networks available on campus:

- Athens and Rome are the secured wireless networks, and require a login as well as special configuration on your computer in order to connect. Please see our Athens and VPN (Rome) handouts for configuration information, or visit http://www.cumc.columbia.edu/it/getting\_started/wireless.html for details.
- The Wireless Guest Network (broadcast as guest-net) is not secured. It does not require special configuration other than selecting this network for your wireless card's connection and agreeing to the Terms and Conditions and Acceptable Use page. Only basic services such as web browsing and email are allowed.

Please take the following into consideration when deciding which network to use:

- Faculty, staff and students should always use one of the secured networks. They are absolutely required when working with patient data and other sensitive information. Many academic, research, and work-related applications and sites are not available unless connected to Athens or Rome.
- It is recommended to use Athens whenever possible. Rome should only be configured on older systems that do not have the necessary wireless authentication and encryption protocols, or for use as a back up method. NOTE: Rome is not compatible with 64-bit Windows systems
- Support for guest-net is limited to verifying whether the network is currently operational. Basic instructions on connecting are provided here as a courtesy only.

Connecting to guest-net

The Wireless Guest Network does not require special configuration or login. Your computer can connect by selecting "guest-net" from the list of networks your computer's wireless card sees within range. Once connected, your web browser will be redirected to a disclaimer page listing the Terms and Conditions and Acceptable Use for the Wireless Guest Network. You must select "I Agree" at the bottom of the page in order to use guest-net.
